

When we're at Taekwondo class, our master teaches us cool moves and helps us become better at Taekwondo. We show respect by listening carefully to what they say and following their instructions. It's like a special rule to be kind and polite to our master because they're helping us grow stronger and smarter.

But guess what? Showing respect doesn't stop at the dojo! At home, our parents are like our very own masters. They teach us lots of stuff, like how to tie our shoes or brush our teeth. We should listen to them just like we do with our Taekwondo master, because they know a whole bunch of cool stuff too!

So, let's remember to be proud Taekwondo kids by showing respect to our masters at class and our parents at home!

RESPECT FOR PARENTS:

Our parents love us more than anything in the whole wide world. They show us love by taking care of us, giving us big hugs and kisses, and making sure we're safe. They also show their love by setting rules for us to follow and expecting us to be good.

Respecting our parents means we talk nicely to them, tell the truth, and do the tasks they ask us to do. When we treat our parents with respect, it makes them really happy and proud of us.

It's super important to always be respectful to our parents. Even when we're mad or upset, we should still speak to them nicely. Even when it's tempting to tell a fib, we should always tell the truth to our parents. And even when things are tough, we should try our best to make our parents proud.

Our parents work really hard to make sure we have happy and safe lives. So, it's important to show them the respect they deserve. They feel really proud when they see us growing up, learning new things, and becoming smart and capable young people. They love watching us discover our talents, solve problems, and get really good at different things.

Our parents feel proud as they watch us grow into smart, capable, young people. They enjoy seeing us develop our talents, work out our problems, and master different skills. They feel happy when we have nice friends who share common interests. It is important that our parents approve of our friends. Sometimes our parents see our friends more clearly than we do. At times, the friends we thought we liked turn out to be disloyal and untrue. Give your parents a chance to meet your friends and respect the advice they offer.

Behaving with respect for our parents is very important. We must always talk politely to our parents, even when we are angry or upset. We must always be honest with our parents, even when it is easier to tell an untrue story. We must always try our best to make our parents proud, even when the task is hard. Our parents work hard to make our lives happy and safe and full of goodness. We need to show them the respect they deserve.
